

Mag. No man was ever reformed by scolding or by sarcasm. Still I don't approve of a woman allowing her tears to flow, trying to reform a man. Some men are happy when they can make a woman cry.

We should all revolt against the idea that some men possess, that we are weaker creatures and can not do without their assistance. Man is as much in need of a good woman's assistance, as woman may need man's.

Nervous. People, who are usually cool, calm and self-confident, usually succeed in what they undertake. They are natural students of the laws of health.

A person desiring to excel every one is very apt to be found lacking or at the foot of his class.

If some of us would improve our one talent, we might gain as high favor as the person who has five.

Cultivate a short memory as to all unkindness and never do evil for evil.

It is not well to try and move mountains to attract attention. Worthy acts will be noticed without attraction.

The man who illy treats his mother is not apt to be very good to a wife, neither will the man who fails to see his parents need make a good house provider.

An envious person is usually an ill-natured person. Women of marriageable age or old maids should not get jealous when their more fortunate sisters find a suitor.

Laura. As I have often said, if anything I do dislike it is to see old girls associating with young misses, thinking it makes them appear young when it only tends to make them look older.

William. From your description, I am inclined to believe your friend will make a good husband. His leaving the city does not denote a lack of devotion. If he is all that he claims to be you may be sure that you will hear from him daily.

E. B. Things are becoming very desperate with a man leaves a town to keep from seeing the girl he loves. If it is as you say, he can make the girl his bride, I think he ought to at least make enough to tell her. The bottom of such pretended affection is easily reached.

Lena. Good men are very scarce and I think women to a great extent are to blame for it. It is often the case, the man who does everything to please a woman soon gets any credit for it, to the contrary he is abused in return, thereby making him worse. Men are peculiar beings; they are susceptible to caressing, and when one does acts of kindness they should be acknowledged in a gentle, pleasant way. Some women seem to forget the fact that even if it is man's duty to provide he is not compelled to remain with a disagreeable woman.

The question has been asked, will a woman stand the abuse of a man for the sake of her children? Well in years gone by she might have done it, but in this enlightening day, she has learned better sense. It is more of a disgrace for parents to squabble and fuss in the presence of their children than it is for them to separate. It is not only a disgrace but a revelation to the young brain and mind. A constant association begets assimilation. Live in a rut and you will die in a rut. Children reared in such a manner will make disagreeable wives and husbands.

A good man sees the necessity of his home and provides accordingly. Never abuse a person because he can not do what you think he ought to do.

Ella. I sympathize with you when you say you feel overlooked because of your occupation. Our society seemed to be composed of people who had good positions, matters not what their position may be. People should be liked socially for what they are, and not for what they do. Hundreds of honest girls can be found in the kitchen, and many of these girls possess good educations and are only driven to such work through a disposition for an honest livelihood.

It is hard for a stingy conniving person to succeed. If one can not be generous otherwise, be generous with pleasant words and by showing an interest in whatever is going on.

Strangers are not interested in one's private affairs, hence it sounds very foolish to hear one speak of his occupation or the property he possesses, when introduced to a stranger. Also it shows ill breeding to speak of another's poverty.

The independent girl is the one who succeeds. Men care mostly for girls when their admirers are many.

Maria. Delays are dangerous. If there are any postponements about your wedding day, let it be on your own side. When a man postpones his wedding day he is not anxious to marry.

Never insist on a person doing what he does not want to do, when the matrimonial sea is in question.

Chum. Thanks for your letters, I quite agree when you say, love should be the foundation of all marriages, or else divorces are bound to take place. Yes, some men marry to take place as well as some women. Wealth in a home without the person you love does not satisfy one of high ideas.
